

Naica

He investigates how the photos of them have been appropriated and manipulated in our contemporary media society. His current investigation is about effigies as political protests and how images of effigies are used. In both works Göttke examines an iconoclastic approach to image. In A Protector in Homs, Syria, included in this chapter, the reverse is the case. Here Göttke's work is about the creation of an image. A Protector in Homs, Syria, was included in the exhibition Naica at the BYRNE gallery in New York City. A video in the exhibition...

Naica

It takes its name from the mythical crystal cave in Chihuahua, Mexico that contains gigantic formations of selenite crystals up to 10 meters.

Just like the cave, Naica carries within it an impressive treasure.

With Naica you bring energy to where you need it most in an elegant and minimalist style. It has 4 and 6 ports in which you can create different power and technology configurations and is proudly made in Mexico.
